

MOVING UP

Congratulations to Andrew Stenger.

Congratulations to Andrew Stenger, Director of Mountain and Base Area Operations.

Walter Elander recently shared that he will be stepping back from his role as Director of Mountain Operations. Walter's departure from the Mountain Ops position does not mean he'll be leaving us in full. He will assume responsibilities associated with directing our on hill Race Program and continue to work on various permitting and planning projects as required. Andrew will transition into combining mountain operations and facilities management under his purview as the Director of Mountain and Base Area Operations.

Andrew began his tenure at Jay Peak as a teenager, working in the Building Maintenance department. He took a brief hiatus to pursue his Commercial Recreation and Tourism degree at the Colorado State University and returned in 2004 working on the various expansion projects. Andy has grown up at, with, and around Jay Peak. His depth of knowledge across all of Jay Peak's facilities and their operations, makes him the best and logical choice to take over on-mountain operations where he will be supported by managers and leaders with decades of experience in snow making, grooming, and lift operations.

While Andrew is technically astute, his success as a leader at Jay Peak is at least equally informed by his deep work ethic, unflappably even-temperament, reliability, and the support he extends to both his teams and across all departments. He is often entrusted with projects that need realignment and as a problem solver and straight-thinking decision maker, he shepherd's them to success. The respect the people on his teams have for him is clearly reciprocated. Andrew has also led, and continues to lead, important sustainability projects at the resort that impact us all, for the better.

As Andy's role changes, so will the responsibilities of other members of the facilities management team. Doug Manning will be promoted to Director of Facilities and Bill Martin will move up to Hotel Maintenance Manager. Standby for more detailed announcements for both Doug and Bill.

Please join me in congratulating Andrew on his new role.
