A quick note for those who haven't seen that the province of British Columbia has closed Whistler for at least 3 weeks (and possibly the rest of their season) because of a growing number of employees who've recently become infected and are looking to 'address and prevent community spread'.

I bring this up to illustrate the point that, despite it being late-season, we're still exposed to potential closures if we don't get ourselves together relative to staff exposures.

If you are feeling sick, exhibiting any of the symptoms relating to COVID-19, or think you have had close contact with someone who has tested positive:

- ◆ Stay home and call your Manager who will connect with our Wellness Director.
- ◆ Your Manager will be in touch with you regarding next steps for your situation (testing, contact tracing, and working with the State on proper documentation, as needed).

Whistler Blackcomb closes as COVID cases spike

Health officials have closed the Whistler Blackcomb ski resort after another alarming spike in COVID cases partly linked to local travel.

New measures another big blow to restaurants

B.C.'s new three-week pause on indoor dining is yet another significant blow for the province's struggling restaurant sector.

New COVID-19 restrictions ban indoor dining

New restrictions to curb the COVID-19 pandemic include a ban on indoor dining as well as the closure of Whistler ski hills.
