

LATE SEASON OPERATIONS 4/12/22 UPDATE

Just a quick update on where we're at and where we're going relative to late season operations here at Jay Peak. As I type this, and because of a string of late season isolated snow events, Jay Peak is offering pretty close to 100% of our available terrain. Now this isn't a horn we're able to blow often, nor does it tend to be one we hammer even when we can but, suffice to say, it's winter out there.

Right up and until the point it won't be.

With several days of showers this week we'll likely lose some terrain, but not the will to push the season forward. Our present plan is to operate with terrain and lifts on both sides of the mountain through April 24th (which is longer than usual for Tramside), close midweek April 25th-29th, then reopen Stateside lifts for the weekend of April 30th and May 1st. Additionally, and caveated by saying 'with what we're seeing for weather now' there's an outside chance we'd be able to reopen again, after closing midweek May 2nd-6th, for the weekend of May 7th-8th.

We may shut down lodging for that May stretch, and the waterpark will be closed for deep cleaning, but if we're able to run a lift, offer some advanced terrain and maybe a grilled hot dog, then we'll do it. It's obvious we won't make any money as most day trippers have done tripped, but our Season Passholders who have already given us their dough, deserve the show, so we'll do what we can.

This plan is expectedly subject to inevitable change, but these are the thoughts in our head now and they're not doing any good if we keep them there all to ourselves.

Plan accordingly. Spring will eventually be behind us, but some of the best days are still in front.

Thanks for pushing the season right alongside us.
